Neeps and Tatties

Neeps are turnips and tatties are potatoes. There is a difference, however, in what we refer to as a turnip in the U.S. vs. in Scotland. The tuber the Scots call a turnip is actually a rutabaga in the U.S. Potatoes are the same in both countries. In Scotland the turnip can also be referred to as a "Swede" (Swedish turnip). The turnip was introduced to Great Britain from Sweden.

Neeps and tatties are served mashed, individually.

Clapshot is a traditional Scottish dish that combines the mashed neeps and tatties along with butter, chives, maybe onions, and maybe drippings.
